CONVERSATION WAS ALL A JOKE

Watson Says Printed Report, Which Appeared to Be Profound Secret,
Was Facetious.

NO ONE TOOK IT SERIOUSLY

He Outlines What Was Said Among Friends and What Was Really Meant.

James E. Watson said today that the whole conversation concerning his candidacy, which was purported in an Indianapolis dispatch to the Newcastle Courier to have taken place in Indianapolis, was nothing more than a joke, and that no one of his friends took the matter seriously.

"With reference to an article which appeared in your issue of yesterday," said Mr. Watson in an interview, "and the one of similar purport published in the Jacksonian, both copied in part from one or more exchanges, permit me to say that the entire matter of my doing this, that or the other thing grew out of a friendly conversation in Indianapolis the other day, in which a number of gentlemen were engaged. The whole talk was in a facetious vein, and we were, to use a familiar phrase, joshing on another."

"In this vein the fellows present fell to discussing me and my plans. One man said that it was reported in his part of the State that I was representing the Steel Trust for a handsome remuneration; another said that in his portion of Indiana it was being circulated that I was representing the Standard Oil Trust for a fabulous retainer; another said that he had heard that I was the paid lawyer of the brewers, receiving fifty thousand a year, and so on and so on."

"To each of these quips I replied that it was true, that I represented all these and other trusts; that every morning when I got up I found a crowd of trust magnates on my front porch waiting to hire me; and that the brewers had wanted me as their attorney ever since I ran for office on a county option platform."

"The whole talk was in a facetious and jocular vein, just as conversations are held every day of the world, and nobody dreamed of taking any part of it seriously."

"In that same running talk one man remarked that he had heard that I was a candidate for the Republican nomination for President in 1916. To this I responded that of course I was; that my representing the trusts was only a side line, and that my real job was in running for that office, which was now my sole occupation; that I had become so accustomed to running for office that I couldn't quit and that I had just as well run for President as anything, and so on and so on."

"Now, this talk was in a hotel lobby with a dozen people around and numbers of men passing and repassing and was all a matter of jest and raillery with no thought of seriousness, and that was the sum and substance of it all. And yet it was handed around until it appeared in public print as a solemn utterance and perhaps a profound secret."

"Inasmuch as a serious note has been sounded in it all, I may take this occasion to say that I am not now, nor have I ever been in the employ of the Standard Oil Trust or the Steel Trust or the Whiskey Trust; and I may also add, that none of them have ever sought to employ me or to engage my services along any line."

"All of us are joking and making fun in conversation every day that are in no wise intended to be taken

ARM AND LEG IS BROKEN

Ernest Dishman Thrown From Pony and Badly Hurt.

Ernest Dishman, the thirteen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Will Dishman, living on the John Widau farm north of the city, suffered a broken right arm and leg while playing at the home of B. F. Martin this morning. Young Dishman was thrown from a pony and fell on his right side breaking a bone in his arm and one in his leg. He was also badly bruised and his condition is serious. Dr. J. C. Sexton and Dr. Lord attended the boy.

CHANGE OF VENUE IN CHANEY CASES

Two Damage Suits Against Physicians Taken From County on Motion of Plaintiff.

KIRKPATRICK SETTLED COSTS

A change of venue was granted this morning by Judge Megee in the two damage suits of Harold E. Chaney and Carlton Chaney against Drs. H. H. Elliott and John T. Paxton. The motion for a change of venue was filed by the attorneys for the plaintiffs. Two suits are for $15,000 each and allege malpractice. The cases were set for trial Monday and had already attracted great interest. The court had set aside three days on the court calendar for trying the cases and the court business will again be interrupted. The Chaney cases undoubtedly would have been the most important to come up this term of court and those who expected to hear the evidence will be disappointed. Judge Megee has not as yet decided where the cases will be tried.

A new trial in Kirkpatrick divorce case will not be asked as Mr. Kirkpatrick is evidently satisfied with the decision of the court for he paid the alimony and the court costs today to Clerk Taylor. Mrs. Kirkpatrick received $900 alimony and $75 for attorney fees.

BOARD TO REFUSE RENEWALS IN APRIL

Commissioners Can't Act on Liquor Licenses Until First Monday in The Month.

DRAIN PETITION DISMISSED

When the commissioners adjourned last Tuesday evening, they designated the next meeting day for Saturday, March 8, because they did not know but that they would have to renew four liquor licenses which were pending. Today they met and continued the application for renewal because they can not make the record certifying to the result of the election until on the first regular meeting day of the month. The first Monday in April the renewals will be refused because the city voted "dry" by 98 votes. The Smith, Barrett & O'Neil, McCormick and Grand Hotel saloons will close tonight.

The petition for the Sanford Heaton drain was dismissed at the request of the attorney for the petitioner and the costs were assessed against the petitioner. Several changes were made in the boards which will serve in the I. & C. subsidy election next Wednesday.

Mrs. Mary A. Sherman is seriously ill, threatened with pneumonia.

TO TELL ABOUT BROWN BROTHER

L. B. Smelser of Local High School Will Describe His Adventures in the Philippines.

HAD THRILLING EXPERIENCES

Saw White Man Only Once a Month During Period he Acted as Instructor.

Next Tuesday at St. Paul M. E. church L. B. Smelser will deliver his popular lecture on "The Real Filipino" for the benefit of the local castle of the Knights of the Holy Grail. The lecture will take up the story of the Philippines, the land, and the nature and customs of the "Little Brown Brother," about whom so much is heard but so little is generally known.

Mr. Smelser knows the Filipino, and has a fund of anecdote and amusing stories of the customs that will delight everybody. Besides his knowledge of the Islands, which is complete, Mr. Smelser has had considerable experience as a public speaker, both as a successful college orator and a lecturer, having given many talks on this same subject.

Mr. Smelser's career in the Islands reads like a romance. Athlete and teacher, he was sent to supervise schools in Negros Oriental at a lonely station 500 miles south of Manila, where he was the only white man for a distance of thirty miles either way, where all his dealings were in the Spanish language or the Visayan dialect.

Seeing a white man once in a month usually, and white woman once in six, riding horseback thousands of miles altogether over rocky trails while inspecting his 42 schools, whose teachers were natives teaching the English language, dangerous trips in canoes and small boats up the coast and across the strait which is over 30 miles wide at Guijulungan, his station, climbing live volcanoes, ranging the almost impenetrable forests in the wildest parts of Negros where the savage Negritos made such trips dangerous, taking charge of a district during a cholera epidemic, when even the plates from which he ate had to be dipped in boiling water as they were put on the table, teaching the rudiments of base ball to the naked little Filipinos and securing for them real Spalding goods to play with until they became as proficient in the art as their more fortunate white brothers—all this and more marked the two and a half years Mr. Smelser spent in the Islands.

Leaving Manila in August 1910, he returned to America by way of Suez. He reached the interior of China, touched at Singapore, Penang, Ceylon, Aden, and Suez, spent some time in Egypt, two weeks in Palestine (swimming in the remarkable Dead Sea, and washing off the "smart" in the Jordan afterwards), visited Genoa, and Milan, Switzerland, and France, and arrived in New York in November. The following January he succeeded Prof. Tyner in the local high school.

EPIDEMIC NOT SERIOUS.

The town of Clarksburg is still afflicted with an epidemic of measles, and so popular has become the disease that most of them all have got it. 'Tis a habit it seems, and to be stylish is to contract this disease. In some instances the disease is prevalent in a bad form, but so far it has not reached the most serious stage.

POOR SEED IS OFTEN CAUSE

Crop Expert, in Bulletin Issued Today, Gives Reasons For Failure of Oats.

UNFAVORABLE SEASON ONE

Peer Soil Treatment Many Times Results in Yield Far Below Normal.

Poor seed is given as the commonest cause for the failure of the oats crop in Indiana in a bulletin, written by C. O. Cromer, assistant in crops, and issued today by the Purdue university experiment station. Mr. Cromer says:

Statistics for the last ten years show that the State has produced on the average 30 bushels of oats per acre. The average price for the same period has been about 35 cents per bushels, the average gross returns per acre being $10.50. We know that many farmers are raising 50 to 60 bushels per acre right along while many more are raising less than the 30 bushel state average.

Fair estimates show that it will cost in the neighborhood of $5.50 per acre to grow a crop of oats, not counting anything for land rental. In fact, the statistics gathered in 1905 from farmers over the State give the average cost of producing an acre of oats as $5.53. If we add to this sum $5.00 for rent of land, the production cost amounts to $10.53 per acre. We readily see that the returns are entirely used up in paying for raising the average crop. Some are certainly making a profit, while many more are as certainly losing money when they raise this crop under present conditions.

There are several causes for the low yields of oats in Indiana, principally among which are unfavorable seasons, poor soil treatment, and poor seed. Oats is naturally a cool weather crop and any season which is hot and dry will not produce a very large crop of oats of the best quality. The soil treatment and cultural methods for oats on the average farm fall far short of what they should be. Anything seems to be considered good enough for oats and they are managed in a slipshod way.

The ground should be put in a loose, level, well pulverized condition, with no clods as large as one's fist. After the ground is properly prepared, care should be taken to properly distribute the seed. There are ways in which the seed can be distributed on the ground as uniformly as with the drill, but there is no way in which all the seed can be sown to the same depth, except by the use of the drill. In a dry season the plants, from seed lying near the surface, will be quickly affected and will produce less than those starting from a point lower down in the soil. However, this article is intended to discuss the seed factors particularly.

Among the causes of low yields which the farmer can overcome, is the use of a variety poorly adapted to the climate in which it is being grown. The Station variety tests covering a period of nine years show that the average yield of the ten highest yielding varieties is 12.3 bushels more than the average of the ten lowest yielders. This difference is sufficient to pay for nearly half the cost of producing a crop. Among the better yielders of which seed can generally be found among farmers or seedsmen are the following: Big Four, Emperor William, Great American, Great Dakota, National, Silver Mine, and Swedish Select.

Experiments have shown that fanning the seed results in an in-

DIVORCE CASE SENT HERE

Papers in Hambrock Suit Received by Clerk Taylor.

The papers in the Hambrock divorce case, which was sent to this county on a change of venue, were received here this morning by Clerk Taylor. Mrs. Pearl Hambrock is asking a divorce from Julius Hambrock. It is the second case of its kind filed by Mrs. Hambrock recently, the first being dismissed and the costs paid by the defendant. The first case was also sent here on a change of venue and had hardly been dismissed when Mrs. Hambrock brought the second action. Both are well known here.

FINAL TOUCHES BEING PUT ON

Fact That Charles L. Henry, President of I. & C., Will Leave For East Tuesday is Significant.

CULMINATION OF EARLY PLANS

Meeting For These Interested in Subsidy Will be Held Monday Afternoon.

A meeting will be held at the court house assembly room Monday afternoon at two-thirty o'clock relating to the special election which will be held in Rushville, Noble and Richland townships Wednesday to determine whether a small tax shall be levied to pay for right-of-way that was not donated for the extension of the I. & C. traction line from this city to Cincinnati.

The meeting will be open to everyone who wishes to attend. It is especially urged that the business men turn out in large numbers, as well as all other persons who want to see the line built from this city.

Matters appertaining to the extension are shaping up most satisfactorily. Information from the close circles of the management of the I. & C. is to that effect. There is no reason to believe there will be a hitch in the plans.

Indications now are that if the subsidy election carry in the three townships in this county and in the three townships in Franklin county, that actual work on the extension will be commenced the latter part of July or the first of August.

Charles L. Henry, president of the I. & C., will leave his home in Indianapolis Tuesday for the east. His trip to New York at this time is especially significant. It clearly indicates that the extension matters are being brought to a speedy culmination.

Development now point to the favorable report of the bonding company's engineer. It is fully expected that all money exigencies will be arranged for in a very short time. This will be finished just as soon as the result of the subsidy elections in Franklin and Rush counties is known.

The Franklin county commissioners have set Tuesday, April 8, for the subsidy elections in Franklin county. The election will be held in the three townships just the same as in this county.

The total number of signatures of freeholders to the petitions was 245, 55 in Posey, 30 in Metamora and 169 in Brookville, only 25 being necessary in each township.

HE'S FOLLOWING LIBERAL POLICY

Mr. Wilson Not Tied Up By Party Strings.

CONFERS WITH REPUBLICANS

Not Only That, but He Has Just Re-appointed Dr. Neill Commissioner of Labor, Indicating That He Is Looking First to the Character of the Men and Not to the Political Service They Have Rendered.

Washington, March 8.—As indicating a general policy by the new administration, the most important appointment that President Wilson has yet made came when he sent to the senate the name of Charles P. Neill for commissioner of labor. Dr. Neill describes himself as an independent in politics. He was appointed labor commissioner by President Roosevelt and reappointed by President Taft. President Wilson has thus filled this important post with a man who has served through two Republican administrations.

The appointment of Mr. Neill, following so closely on the heels of the appointment of John H. Marble as interstate commerce commissioner, has indicated conclusively that Mr. Wilson is looking first to the character of the men and not to the political service they have rendered. Mr. Marble is a Democrat, but has not been very active in the political field.

Another development indicates that President Wilson is going to adopt a very liberal policy in conferring with the senate in regard to appointments he intends to make. He is not going to confine his efforts to the Democratic members of the senate. The new course that Mr. Wilson has followed is hailed with approval on Capitol Hill.

It was learned that President Wilson, working through members of his cabinet, will make all possible haste to clear up the large number of appointments that have been piled upon him through the action of senate Democrats in holding up the Taft nominations at the last session. President Wilson is determined to get the patronage problems disposed of as soon as possible.

ORE SUPPLY IS UNLIMITED

Expert Sees No Danger of Running Out of Iron.

New York, March 8.—Counsel for the government has finished with James Gayley as a witness in the suit to dissolve the United States Steel corporation. He spent an hour under cross-examination and will continue in the same role Monday.

The results obtained in the three days from the former vice president of the steel corporation and its big technical man seemed to please counsel on both sides.

Mr. Galey asserted that the United States Steel corporation does not hold any ore monopoly; that there is plenty of ore in this world for any competitors, if they want it. He instanced among other places, Cuba, where, he said, there is more ore than in the entire Mesaba district. His engineers investigated, he said, and found one billion tons of iron ore in the state of Minas Geraes, Brazil. There are enormous deposits in Texas, Utah, in California and in other western states.

HAVE CONFIDENCE IN HIM

Hospital Directors Ask Dr. Friedmann to Continue His Work.

New York, March 8.—The board of directors of the People's hospital by vote have expressed their full confidence in Dr. Frederick F. Friedmann, the Berlin doctor, who performed in that hospital his first demonstration of his supposed cure for tuberculosis. The directors asked Dr. Friedmann to accept the freedom of the hospital and treat there as many patients as he cares to. He has agreed and will continue his treatment of tuberculosis sufferers.

Packett Had the Best of It.

New York, March 8.—Wonderful boxing skill displayed by Packett MacFarland in Madison Square Garden last night convinced 10,000 spectators that he was the master in a clever ten-round contest with Jack Britton. MacFarland had Britton staggering and reeling at times, but the latter's stamina enabled him to keep on his feet.

Kahn Is Found Guilty of Arson.

South Bend, Ind., March 8.—Benjamin Kahn, wealthy merchant of this city and allegedly connected with an "arson trust" that operated in Chicago, Kansas City, Mo., Fort Wayne and Wisconsin and Indiana towns, was found guilty of firing his own store last year in South Bend to collect insurance. The jury was out forty hours.

Pumped Water on Strikers.

Trenton, N. J., March 8.—Rioting followed an attempt of striking trackmen on the Pennsylvania railroad to put a stop to all work at the yards in Morrisville. The several hundred strikers were finally dispersed by a locomotive, which was run up and down the tracks pumping water upon the strikers.

Indiana to Participate In Big Celebration.

TO PAY VETERANS' EXPENSES

House Bill Appropriating $20,000 to Pay the Expenses of the Indiana Survivors of the Battle of Gettysburg at the Celebration Marking the Semi-Centennial of Battle Next August, Passed Senate Unanimously.

Indianapolis, March 8.—During the discussion of the W. W. Spencer house bill for the creation of a Gettysburg anniversary commission and for the appropriation of $20,000 to pay the expenses of the survivors of the battle of Gettysburg to the field next July, when the fiftieth anniversary of the battle will be celebrated, the patriotism of the senate was aroused. The bill was passed unanimously and now goes to the governor. Considerable discussion arose over the section giving the commission authority to take to Gettysburg any number of citizens "to make a proper showing." Senator Stotsenburg sought to amend the wording of that section so that it would not indicate that the civil war veterans would not make a proper showing. The amendment was not adopted and the bill passed in its original form. Governor Ralston already has asked all Gettysburg veterans to send their names and addresses to the office of the adjutant general in the statehouse.

A State Song and Flower.

Floor Leader Spencer introduced a resolution that was adopted by the house making the carnation Indiana's state flower, and with the concurrence of the senate in this action Indiana will be provided with an official flower and an official song, "On the Banks of the Wabash," on which the house took final action Wednesday.

Two roads bills, the Biddle township road bill carrying a provision for the payment of road tax in cash, above $20, and the Hawkins-G. W. Spencer county road bill, were passed by the senate, after the house had threatened to hold up action on senate bills until the two measures were passed. The house farmers have been working hard for several days to force these two road bills through the senate. The Hawkins-Spencer bill is an important measure and represents the work of the administration forces which have been trying to give the people some sort of highways legislation. It is a roads maintenance measure, rather than a road-building law. It provides for county superintendents of roads and for township superintendents working under the county superintendents.

Compromise Bill Passed.

Though it was opposed by labor members who declared it to be a mere makeshift and a compromise at the expense of the working women, the house passed, 61 to 26, the Gardner-Fleming bill fixing the maximum working hours for women and girls at ten hours a day and fifty-four hours a week. The house also passed, 67 to 2, Senator Grube's bill providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the hours and conditions of labor among women. The vote was taken under suspension of the rules. The bill is a senate concession to the house following the defeat in the upper house of the Dickinson-Koenig nine-hour measure. It provides for the appointment by the governor of a commission of five persons, one to be an employer, one an employee and one a woman, to investigate and report to the next general assembly.

This is about as much money as the ordinary wife-beating variety of husbands would earn anyhow, so the wives are happy.

The numerous cases of wife beating that are coming to the attention of the judges have caused the judges to decide to sift each charge carefully hereafter before sentencing culprits under the new law.

"Injuns" Call on Mr. Lane.

Washington, March 8.—One of the first official acts of Franklin K. Lane as secretary of the interior, was the holding of a powwow with seventy Indians, twenty-seven of whom were chiefs. The Indians, who were here to attend the inauguration of President Wilson, made a formal call on Secretary Lane. Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs Abbott, in introducing the delegation to Secretary Lane, said it represented about sixteen different Indian tribes, with a total population of 30,000 and combined wealth of more than $100,000,000.

MEXICAN PEOPLE OF THREE CLASSES, MOSTLY INDIAN

Only About One-tenth of People Have Purely White Blood.

The Red Skinned Citizens Are Proud of Race—Nation Is Impoverished.

A STUDY of the Mexican people falls naturally into three divisions, for the population consists of people of purely Spanish descent, of mestizos, or half breeds of Spanish and Indian blood and of pure blooded Indians. Out of Mexico's 15,000,000 inhabitants one-half may be roughly estimated to be mestizos. Although the census figures of 1900 have about one-fifth, or 3,000,000, of purely white descent, it is likely that not more than a tenth come under this head, since Indian blood permeates all classes. At the same time special difficulties are met in attempting to draw a dividing line between Indian and mestizo. Bryce chooses to estimate the number of Indians at 8,000,000 and the mestizos at 6,000,000. Included in Mexico's population is a foreign element numbering about 75,000 people. The number of Americans in Mexico before the revolutionary troubles of the last year or two was estimated at almost 20,000.

Spanish Oppression.

When the Spaniards arrived in Mexico they found a large sedentary population of natives cultivating the soil and trained to industry. These the conquerors turned into serfs, who were compelled to perform the arduous and to them most distasteful work of mining. Agriculture, too, was left to the Indians, for the warm climate made labor, or any kind of manual labor, for that matter, most distasteful to the white men. The pure white population increased hardly at all, because few new settlers came, but the Spaniards mixed with the natives, with the result that after several generations there was a considerable half breed population, even though some of the tribes, notably those in the state of Oaxaca, have remained to this day distinct from the white race and from each other.

And it is this branch of the Mexican people, along with the pure blooded descendants of some fifty aboriginal Indian tribes, that constitutes for the main part Mexico's problem in government. It is not a race problem in the sense of their being a color line. Educated and well to do Indians hold high places in Mexico. In fact, President Benito Juarez, one of the country's great heroes, was a full blooded Zapoteca, and Porfirio Diaz is prouder of his Mixteca ancestry than of the white blood he also claims. Nor does the half breed suffer any disability, social or political.

Mestizos Imposed Upon.

The Indians and mestizos, for the most part poor and ignorant, are little more than the raw material for citizens, and the upper class Mexicans use them for their own selfish purposes both in politics and business.

The great weakness of Mexico's social system lies in the fact that there are but two classes, an upper and a lower, the former extremely limited in number. A middle class, such as forms the great bulk of intelligent citizens in this country and in Europe, tends but slowly to appear.

Upper class Mexicans are for the most part men of property. Their wealth, education and social position enable them to wield enormous power over the great laboring class of mestizos and Indians, whose work in the fields and mines makes possible the existence and continuance of the national industries. These peons at the present time are not far removed from serfdom, for their general poverty as a class and the land monopoly of the

GUSTAVO MADERO "MOST HATED MAN IN MEXICO."

Gustavo Madero, brother of President Madero, who was shot to death following his arrest, was known as "the most hated man in Mexico."

He was accused of being the arch grafter of Mexico.

Although he possessed a large private fortune, he was alleged to have taken many millions of pesos from the country's treasury.

He was the "power behind the throne," but even to his brother he was accused of being a false counselor.

He was held responsible by many for the birth of the opposition to Francisco Madero in discrediting Emilio Vasquez Gomez, a hero of the Madero revolution, and making Jose Pino Suarez the vice president.

While in New York two years ago financing the Madero revolution he was accused of lining his own pockets in return for promises to certain oil promoters.

He recently returned from a special mission to Japan.

Gustavo Madero was about thirty-seven, good looking, well educated and engaging. He entertained lavishly and was popular in New York and Washington society.

MADERO AND SUAREZ HAD SIMILAR CHARACTERISTICS.

Francisco I. Madero and Jose Pino Suarez, the president and vice president of Mexico, who were shot to death after being deposed, were largely similar in traits of character and capabilities. Madero, whose life story has been previously well outlined, was born Oct. 4, 1873. He was a member of an enormously wealthy family and received a splendid education.

He was a dreamer and developed big theories about the welfare of his oppressed countrymen. He dared to rise against Diaz, and at first many thought him insane. In the end he conquered the dictator and became president. His rule lasted two years and was, as is seen in the present disturbances, unpopular.

Jose Maria Pino Suarez was barely thirty-five years old and had never been heard of in public until the outbreak of the Madero revolt, save as a lawyer in Merida, Yucatan, where he had carried on a small practice. He was over six feet tall, but of slight figure. When he got an inkling of Madero's intentions to lead a revolution against Porfirio Diaz he issued a small paper, or circular, in which he came out strongly for "reform." It did not take long for President Diaz's soldiers to trace the sheet to Suarez, and in 1909 he fled to San Antonio and later got into personal touch with Madero. They became fast friends at their first meeting.

During the hardest battles of the Madero revolution Suarez was constantly in touch with the unfortunate leader. As soon as Diaz resigned Madero brought pressure to bear which resulted in Suarez being elected governor of Yucatan, from which office he was elevated to the vice presidency. During his short term as governor of Yucatan he became very popular among all factions. His kindly manner and honest face made friends for him right and left, and this popularity continued and increased while he occupied the posts of vice president and of federal secretary of education.

upper class place them under a sort of feudal regime.

Nation Is Poor.

Despite her great agricultural and mineral wealth, Mexico is a poor country in that her resources have been developed in such a manner as to bring little or no wealth to the great mass of inhabitants. The extensive scientific development of mines and plantations has been for the most part in the hands of foreigners and foreign companies.

The lure of silver and gold ever since the days of Cortes has been more of a curse than a blessing to Mexico. Agriculture must be the foundation of the greatness in the long run of any country, and in view of the remarkable variations of climatic zones and the great wealth and variety of vegetation, agriculture, not mining, should have been Mexico's natural mainstay. It has been estimated that if the capital expended on mining in Mexico had been applied to the cultivation of the soil the country would be four times as rich as it is at the present time. However this may be, none can deny that the overemphasis on mineral production has hindered the proper development of the Mexican people.

Few Small Landowners.

James Bryce points out that the absence of that class of intelligent small landowners, which is the soundest and most stable element in the United States, is a misfortune for Mexico. The enormous landed estates—the largest single estate in the world is in Chihuahua—arrogate to the enjoyment and enrichment of a few the land which the white men wrested from the forbears of the peon.

Yet there are only twenty people to the square mile, for Mexico is as large as Great Britain, France, Germany and Austria put together. The very size of the country, out of all proportion to the population, has proved a drawback to the people in their attempts to establish a stable form of democratic government. Mountains, deserts and jungle help to increase the difficulty of intercommunication.

Will Appear in "The Enchantress"

KITTY GORDON.

With pretty Kitty Gordon in the title role, "The Enchantress," a comic opera by Victor Herbert, will be the attraction at English's opera house, Indianapolis, Monday, Tues. and 12. "The Enchantress" is a genuine light opera, written around a mythical kingdom, a story said to be brim full of humor and amusement. The book is the combined efforts of Mme. Fred Gresac and H. B. Smith. Yet the great charm of the play, it is said, lies in the music provided by Mr. Herbert.

ance about the middle of this week.

An amendment is to be offered to the Spencer weight and measure bill by its author, changing it to apply only to counties having fifty thousand population or more, instead of twenty thousand, as it now stands. This change would include under the provisions of the bill only nine of the ninety-two counties. In the other eighty-three counties it will be left to the board of commissioners to act as they see fit.

The author of the bill points out that practically all of the nine counties to which the bill applies already have inspectors of weights and measures and that requiring them to do something that has already been done is not much of a change. He did not care to bring the bill up, he said, unless there was a full membership in attendance to vote on it.

NEW BILL MAKES A SLIGHT CHANGE

Measure to be Introduced in Legislature Provides Voters Must Petition for Primary.

INSTEAD OF A CONVENTION

Present Bill Seeks to Make Primary Rule Unless Petitions Would Have Old Plan.

Primary election legislation in the State legislature is sleeping, as far as any action on measures already introduced is concerned. The two leading house bills fathered by Representative John R. Jones, of Plymouth, and Representative James R. Smith, of Coahuila, have been supplanted by an entirely different bill which is in the process of preparation. The Jones bill provides that all nominations, state, county and municipal, shall be made by direct primaries.

It is understood that the new bill will have the backing both of the administration and of the Democratic organization. The feature which was unacceptable to the organization in the Fleming bill will be remedied, this being the provision applying to the substitution of delegate conventions for primary elections by petition.

The Fleming measure provides that all officers, state, county and municipal, shall be nominated by primary election except on petition that a delegate convention be substituted locally for the primary scheme. The new measure, it is understood, will contain the reverse of this provision and will provide that all nominations, from the state offices down, shall be by delegate conventions. Primary elections may be substituted for this convention system on petition of a certain number of voters.

This new bill will put upon those favoring direct primary nominations in each election the duty of filing a petition that they be substituted for the delegate convention plan. This bill is expected to make its appear-

DICTATOR'S RULE IS BOLDLY CONTESTED

Several Mexican States Decline to Get In Line.

Washington, March 8.—While the revolts against the Huerta government in the north are growing to more serious proportions, the provisional government is exerting every effort to assert its authority throughout Mexico, so dispatches from Mexico indicate. The state governments of Sonora and Coahuila have refused to accept the Huerta government, and armed forces have been put in the field in both states to resist the federal troops.

The federal government has arrested the governor of San Luis Potosi on charges of contemplated rebellion in connection with the revolt headed by Governor Carranza of the state of Coahuila.

At Hermosillo, the capital of Sonora, the legislature has refused to recognize the Huerta government and has seized the federal telegraph. The city is being fortified against possible attack by federal troops. The Southern Pacific managers are so alarmed over the situation that they have ceased all operations of trains in Sonora, including the lines to Cananea and Naco, where there are extensive American mining interests. The road has withdrawn all its rolling stock on these lines into the United States.

Saturday, March 8, 1913.

The Minority's Chance.

The change which took place in Washington at noon last Tuesday means something more than the displacement of one great party by another. It marks the close of an epoch. This does not assume that the career of the retiring party as a great national organization has ended, or that the regime which is to be installed is to be a permanency. There are no permanencies in power among parties in a republic. In this case 1913 may merely repeat the story told by 1885 and 1893, at the previous restorations to power of the party which comes to the front today. Its ascendancy in each instance proved to be shorter than its enemies as well as its friends imagined at the outset. There was a brief break in the sway of the party which had long been dominant in the government, and then that party re-entered power. Possibly the interregnum which begins Tuesday will be equally short.

Nevertheless, the change in parties involves an alteration in conditions under which the whole face of politics is transformed. For the moment, at least, the great conservative forces of the country have been thrust into the background, and strange fancies control the public mind.

In the recent election each of the leading parties lost votes, as compared with four years earlier, and a new political sect made its advent, which polled more votes than the Republican organization cast. Except the Socialist party, no other political faith ever had such a variety of articles in its creed, some of which, if successful, would be a serious menace to stable government as we have known it heretofore in the United States.

While most of the members of that party have been drawn from the Republican side, many of them have been taken from the Democratic ranks also. The creed of that party would naturally make a strong appeal to Socialists, yet the anomaly is presented of an increase in strength by the Socialist party. Of the parties which figured in the campaigns of 1908, the Socialist was the only one which increased its poll in 1912. This wave of extremism which is sweeping over the country is certain to affect the programme of the party which is about to enter power.

Yet a new career of usefulness may be opening for the Republican party. When Cleveland won his overwhelming victory in 1893, and a government controlled in all its branches by the Democrats for the first time since Buchanan's election in 1856 went into power, many Republicans imagined that their organization was cast into eclipse for a generation. Right at the outset in his extra session, however, Cleveland was compelled to appeal to the Republicans to aid him in carrying out the policy which the session was called to enact. And the Republicans responded promptly and heartily. Thus a Congress which wanted more silver legal tender currency was coerced into prohibiting all further growth in that element of the circulation. For this important work the Republican minority in Congress deserved credit, and the credit was freely given by Cleveland. As an alert, intelligent minority the Republican party will have an opportunity to assert itself in a beneficial way in the special session which is about to open. Under the leadership of Root, Lodge and their associates in the Senate and Mann, Guernsey and their colleagues in the House, the Republicans will have a chance to render useful service to the country in the next two years, and particularly in the session of Congress which is near at hand. In these days, when queer fads are at the front, and fantastic personages are imposing their strange ideas on the populace, it is well for the country that the great party of intelligence and poise which ruled it most of the time for the past half a century has still sufficient vitality to go to the rescue whenever a new call for its services is made.

The alarming tendency of the lambs to hang on to their own pelts has convinced Wall street that the country is going to the dogs.

The retiring cabinet always carry away their own chairs, but it has never been customary to saw up and divide the table.

As Tom J. Appears in Action

Here's the way Tom J. Geraghty appears in the motion picture, "The Making of a Reporter, or The Wages of Sin," which will be shown at the Princess theater next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evening.

He has just come from the Pennsylvania station and is carefully examining his map of New York City to get located. The one-time Rushville newspaper man has the center of the stage all during the picture. He is the "fall" guy for a metropolitan who thinks he has a rube to deal with.

But your amateur is a sly old rube at that. He sticks to Mr. Metropolitan Reporter like a fly to flypaper, and the reporter decides he is such a good sticker that he ought to make a good newspaper man. His trials are amusing. The only unrealistic thing about the film is that Tom does not recognize any of his old friends in Rushville.

Some O' Old-fashioned Kind.

Since publishing a story about the foolhardy girls who wear dresses shoved out in the neck in the winter time and think they're fresh-air friends, we have been besieged with requests to withdraw what we said. We are publishing the following simply to show we have company. Here it goes and you can stop reading any place you like. That's the beauty of it.

Backward, turn backward, oh time in your flight, and give us a maiden dressed proper and right. We are so weary of switches and rats, Billy Burke clusters and peach baskets hats, wads of jute hair in a horrible pile stacked on their heads to the height of a mile. Something is wrong with the maidens I fear; give us the girls as they used to appear. Give us the girlies we once knew of yore whose curls didn't come from a hair-dressing store. Maidens who dressed with a sensible view just as nature intended them to. Give us a girl with a figure her own, and fashioned divinely by nature alone. Feminine styles getting fiercer each year; oh, give us the girls as they used to appear. One of those 'twenty-five-year-old' kind. No wonder the men of that day sighed and pined. One whose fair tresses were ample enough, without the addition of make believe stuff. Give us the days when the hats women wore were not the reason Christian men swore. Over our way such a rare maiden steer—yes, give us the girl as she used to appear.

Mrs. Anna Kirkpatrick, who was yesterday granted a divorce from Jesse Kirkpatrick, says that it was Kate Mapes of Glenwood, instead of Ollie Newman, who testified against her in the trial. This is contrary to the way it was reported.

BASKET BALL.

The last curtain raiser to be played this season by the girl teams, was played at the Madison-Rushville game last night. The teams were well matched, due to the wise selection of Miss Baldwin. Gladys Wallace, Josephine Kelley and Freda Hiner were the stars of the game.

During the first half Mary Rosenrance and Harriet Smith were centers, in the last half Marie Clawson and Florence Nipp. Mary Rosenrance and Marie Clawson were the centers for the team composed of Gladys Wallace and Ruby Daubenspeck, forwards, Sadie Broadhead, and Katherine Hitt, guards, Harriet Smith and Florence Nipp were the centers on the team composed of Freda Hiner and Josephine Kelley, forwards, Beatrice Reeve and Pauline Felts, guards. Josephine Kelley made one foul goal and one field goal in the first half; Gladys Wallace made two foul goals and two field goals. In the second half Freda Hiner made two field goals and one foul goal; Josephine Kelley made one field goal and Gladys Wallace made a foul goal. Thus the score was 10 to 7 in favor of Freda's and Josephine's team. Although the resulting score was not so close, there was quite a long time in the game when the score was a tie, making the game very interesting. Miss Baldwin officiated.

GIRL'S BASKET BALL SERIES TO START MONDAY.

Beginning Monday, March 10th, the girls of the R. H. S. are going to play the first of a series of three inter-class basket ball games. The other two games will take place the two following Mondays, March 17th and 24th. Each class will be represented in each game.

For the first game the teams will draw lots to decide upon the contestants. Beginning at seven-thirty sharp two teams will play one half of ten minutes. Then while they are resting—instead of having an intermission, the other two teams will play a half of ten minutes. The other two halves will be played in the same order and of the same length. In this way there will be two games at each game of the series.

In the second of the series, March 17, the winning teams will play each other, and the losing teams each other. In the third of the series, March 24th the teams which have never played each other will play. Thus at the end of the series, each team will have played each other team. The team winning the greater per cent of the games will be counted as the victor. These games will be first in which real rivalry will exist. Always before the teams were chosen from just any class, but now, it will be Senior against Junior, Sophomore against Freshman and so on.

The games are open to the public and will begin promptly at seven-thirty. An admission of fifteen cents will be charged at each game. The proceeds of this series will be used to procure steel lockers as much needed addition to the girls dressing room. If one does not wish to miss these enjoyable evenings, he must not forget the time, the place, and the price of the girls basket ball series.

Allan G. Aigler, an attorney of Bellevue, Ohio, has written here in an effort to locate Gussie French Pierce who has lately inherited a large estate.

Gussie French was formerly a resident of Painesville, Ohio, and married a man by the name of Pierce a good many years ago, the letter says. The old residents of Painesville say that Gussie French was a beautiful girl and one of the belle of the town at the time of her marriage of Pierce. These old residents state that they are sure Mr. and Mrs. Pierce went to Indiana to live, where a daughter and son were born to them, that after the lapse of a few years following the marriage, the parents of Gussie French died and since that time no word has ever been received from her by the Painesville people now living. It happens that all the intimate friends of Gussie French are dead and that the old people now living there can give no more definite information than this which have been already related.

Henry County Farmers Hold Meeting and Determine to Take Advanced Step in Agriculture.

ORGANIZATION IS PERFECTED

A meeting with the object of organizing an agricultural association with the direct result of employing a soil expert for Henry county was held Thursday afternoon in the assembly room of the courthouse, says the Newcastle Courier. The meeting was not very well attended, probably due to the disagreeable weather. Nine of the thirteen townships in the county were represented at the meeting.

J. H. Hewitt was named temporary chairman of the association and John Q. Prigg, secretary. The business of adopting a constitution and by-laws was next taken up. The organization is named the Henry County Crop Improvement Association and its object is to develop the agricultural resources and to foster the best commercial, social and material interests of the county.

The constitution sets forth that the annual dues are $1, but puts no restriction on the voluntary subscription raised by the finance committee. The officers of the association consist of a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and an agricultural advisor. No salary is attached to the offices with the exception of the agricultural expert, whose compensation will be determined by the executive committee.

You Can Take Defective Material and Build a Buggy

Then you can take putty and paint and by properly applying these two articles change the appearance of this defective vehicle so it will deceive even the shrewdest of vehicle buyers. We have found out by experience that there is only one test that never fails to expose defective material and unskilled workmanship. Manufacturers have told us that their vehicles were built of a certain kind of material and by men who understood how to build buggies and in the wind-up we found they had misrepresented the matter to us. We are going to protect the interests of our customers and sell them exactly what we tell them we are selling them, and have adopted the plan illustrated below to determine for ourselves what each vehicle we sell is made of. A vehicle that will stand a test of this kind must be built of material that has no flaws and by men who have had experience enough to know where to re-enforce each part of the vehicle in order to give strength and make it wear.

It is your duty to find out what is under the paint of every vehicle you buy and if you buy it of us you can certainly have that privilege. We want you to come to our opening on MARCH 14th and 15th, and let us show you buggies that are built to give road service by men who know how to build them.

ering it into his own arms. She gazed intently, frowning, grieving a woman's grief over suffering, bending over its face; her own face held back over it when she saw the truth. Then she passed him and placed the body of the child upon its cot near-by, covering it gently.

"Grace, Grace!" sobbed Halsey. He fell upon his knees at his wife's bedside. She did not see him, did not recognize him, although she turned a questioning face toward him. "Me, too!" he cried. "I want to go! I want to die and end it! Everything's wrong"

"Come," said the doctor presently; "it's too late now. I'll call for you after a time." He took Halsey by the arm and led him from the room. Returning, he signed for Virginia Rawn also to leave the sick chamber. Left alone, the medical man turned to the professional nurse in attendance. "Keep it quiet," he said. "It would hurt my practice—do you hear?"

He kicked beneath the bed a small broken vial, and wiped away the stain from the lips of the dying woman.

The doctor, of course, had his guess, the public its guess, the daily papers theirs. The truth was, Grace Halsey, by butler route, had learned of the tete-a-tete of her husband and her stepmother a half hour before this time.

Grace Halsey, dead, her crippled child dead beside her, never knew the contents of the letter which had been received for her that morning. It still lay on the hall table unnoticed.

There was almost none to pay attention to the many duties of the household. The last servants had begun to pass, scenting disaster even as had others. The magic which had built this mansion house now lacked strength to hold its tenantry. There remained now only one man—the butler, lingering for his pay. Only two persons might still be said to be accustomed by any sense of loyalty or duty to Graystone Hall and its owner—Halsey and Virginia Rawn.

To the tense, strained nerves of John Rawn the truth was now as apparent as it had been to the sensibilities of all these others, late friends, servants, sycophants. Ruin was here, in his citadel, his castle of pride. Only one thing could save him. . . .

He hesitated at the door, held back from that which he knew he was about to face. . . . But no, he reasoned, she was there alone, he must see her!

He flung open the folding doors and stood holding them apart.

Yes, she was there! John Rawn's face drew into a ghostly smile. Yes, she had won! She, the wonderful woman, had triumphed as he had planned for her to triumph. She had won!

They stood before him, those two, silent, face to face, embraced; their arms about each other even as he flung wide the door. They turned to him now, stupefied, so weary, so overstrained, that their arms still hung, embraced. The face of each was white, desolate, unhappy; more hopeless and desperate than terrified, but horrible. They were lovers. They loved, but what could love do for them, so late? They had paid—but what right had they to love, so late?

John Rawn, the man who had wrought all this, stood and gazed, gazing, smiling distantly, at his wife's face. Why, then, should she be unhappy? What was to be lost save that which he, John Rawn, was losing—or had been about to lose?

But he was startled, stupefied, himself, for one moment. He turned back, hesitating; and so tiptoed away, leaving them, although the joint knowledge of all was obvious. They had not spoken a word, had not started apart, had only gazed at him like dead persons, white, silent, motionless—not lovers; no, not lovers.

For one-half instant, alone in the wide and darkened hall, Rawn straightened himself up, threw his chest out. Yes, she had won—she had done her task! She held Charles Halsey fast—there—in her embrace. He, John Rawn, multimillionaire, collector of rare objects, one of God's anointed rich, had the shrewdest wife the world had ever seen, the most beautiful, the most successful!

Had he not seen—was it not there before his eyes? She had his one enemy netted, in her power—there—he had not seen? She brought him, bound hand and foot, to him, John Rawn! Could a man doubt his eyes? They had hunted well in couple, he and his wife, and now she had pulled down their latest victim!

"Keep It Quiet."

came in across the open gallery front. Night came, night unbroken by more than a few nights in all the myriad windows of this stately monument which John Rawn had built as proof of his personal success. Vehicles, passing slowly, held occupants staring in curiosity at this vast, vacant pile. Human sympathy lacked, human aid there was not.

Thus it chanced easily that there passed up the long driveway of Graystone Hall, almost unnoticed, a vehicle carrying one who seemed a stranger there; an elderly, rather tall woman of gray hair and unfashionable garb, who made such insistence with the servant at the door that at length she won her way through.

Her errand seemed not one of curiosity, nor did she lack in decision. She left upon the table an old-fashioned reticule, and following the advice given her, in reply to her question, passed up the stair and down the upper hall, to the room where lay Grace Halsey and her child. There unknown by any of the household and accepted by those whose professional duties took them thither, she remained for many hours. Halsey and Virginia Rawn did not know of her coming.

It was a cold home-coming, also, which awaited John Rawn. But he came at last, to meet that which was for him to encounter. It was night. The lights were few and dim. None greeted him at his own gate, none even at his own door, which was left unguarded. At length he found the solitary footman-butler, asleep in a chair, the worse for wine.

"Where is she?" he demanded. "Where is Mrs. Rawn?"

He turned before he could be coherently answered, and passed down the hall toward the library, through whose closed doors he saw a faint light gleaming.

Something impelled John Rawn to hesitate. He stood, himself the very picture of despair, his face drawn, haggard, unshaven, his hair disordered, his hands twitching. He must find his wife, he said to himself; he must ask her what she had done with their last hope. Yes, yes, it must be true! With Halsey's aid he would yet win! If she had won—Halsey would yet be on his side—Halsey would tell him—Halsey would go back to the factory—

But John Rawn hesitated at this door. He felt, rather than knew, believed rather than was advised, that his wife was beyond that door. He waited, apprehensive, but kept up with himself the pitiful pretense of self-deception. Ah, power, control, command!—those were the great things of the world, he reasoned. True, he knew his daughter lay dead in her room on the floor above—the paper he held in his hand told him that; for at last the doctor had prepared his statement regarding Mrs. Halsey's death by "heart failure"—the rich and all akin to them always die respectably, in a house so large as Graystone Hall. But it was too late to save her, Rawn reasoned.

Grace Halsey, dead, her crippled child dead beside her, never knew the contents of the letter which had been received for her that morning. It still lay on the hall table unnoticed.

There was almost none to pay attention to the many duties of the household. The last servants had begun to pass, scenting disaster even as had others. The magic which had built this mansion house now lacked strength to hold its tenantry. There remained now only one man—the butler, lingering for his pay.

"Look about you," he commented grimly. "You're going to lose all this—all these splendid, beautiful things."

"I don't mind losing them. I want to be poor. Oh, my God! Just to be loved, and clean! Charley, can we?"

"But why choose me? There are so many others!"

"All like Mr. Rawn himself—men crazed of money, power, selfishness. I wanted something different. Do you think it could have been my father's old ideas coming out in me, so late?"

"I don't know what to do! Let us see him first, and tell him."

"Look about you," he commented

MANY KILLED BY TERRIFIC BLAST

Three Hundred Tons of Dynamite Tears Loose.

BALTIMORE HARBOR DISASTER

Dangerous Cargo of British Steamer Lets Go, Tearing Two Vessels All to Pieces, Killing Fifty Men and Injuring as Many More, While the Coast For Miles Was Shaken by the Terrific Force of the Explosion.

Baltimore, Md., March 8.—Fifty-four known dead, others, probably, whose bodies are buried in the icy waters of the harbor, and scores of injured over many of whom death hovers, represent the human toll of an explosion of 300 tons of dynamite in the hold of the British steamer Alum Chine, off Fort Howard. The money loss probably will total $600,000.

By a curious irony of fate it was the instinct of mercy and brave men's gallant responses to the appeal of two of their fellows in imminent and deadly danger, that swelled the death list and the list of terribly injured to their ghastly proportions.

Curling smoke from the bow of the Alum Chine warned the members of her crew, the stevedores engaged in loading her and the crew of the tug Atlantic, lying alongside, that death was in the air. In the hold of the steamship and aboard a barge roped to her side were more than 300 tons of dynamite. Every man who saw the thin spirals of smoke knew in an instant the coal bunkers of the Alum Chine were on fire and that within a few minutes the heat and flames would reach the dynamite.

Death Follows Act of Mercy.

There was a rush to the ship's side. Fourteen members of the crew and four of the stevedores tumbled aboard the little launch Jerome that just before had carried out two or three new firemen. Most of the other seamen and the stevedores leaped for the decks of the Atlantic. Hurriedly hawsers were severed and tug and launch sped away from the doomed ship.

The Atlantic was but a few hundred feet away but rapidly reaching a place of safety, when two figures were seen clambering from the hold of the Alum Chine. They were two sailors who had been left behind. They reached the side of the vessel and, hanging to the ropes, sent up piteous appeals for help.

The appeals found response. Despite the danger that menaced him and his vessel and the knowledge that within a few minutes' half of death would be falling all around, Captain William E. VanDyke of the Atlantic heard and heeded the call. Standing in the pilot house of the Atlantic, he gave the orders that turned the tug's nose again toward the doomed steamship, sped to the rescue and took the two seamen aboard.

Then again the Atlantic sought safety, but sought it too late. With a roar the dynamite exploded. For a moment a dense pall of smoke covered the waters. When it cleared away ship and barge had disappeared and the Atlantic, a dismantled hulk, helpless on the surface of the bay, had become a human shambles.

Gave Life For Gallantry.

Death in dreadful form had descended from the sky. The Alum Chine had been torn into shreds, and boxes of dynamite mingled with the flying fragments of steel and timber, filled the air. These fell on the packed decks of the Atlantic, the dynamite exploding as it fell, and sweeping those on board as charge of shrapnel levels charging troops.

Men's heads and limbs were torn from their bodies. There were groans and cries of pain mingled with the death rattle of the dying sailors and stevedores. Blood was everywhere. From ships and launches nearby watchers saw dismembered bodies flung across and tumbled about the Atlantic's decks.

Captain VanDyke gave his life for his gallantry. His body, with one arm severed, was among those recovered by the parties of rescuers.

The chief losers are the owners of the Alum Chine, which cost in the neighborhood of $375,000.

Upon the Maryland Steel company devolves the next greatest loss. While a thorough survey may result in finding serious defects in her construction, a superficial examination of the collier Jason, which the company had just completed for the United States government, indicates a damage of $100,000.

A half mile from the scene of the disaster is the quarantine hospital. There were a dozen patients there, and not one of these escaped injury. The hospital was battered and scarce a pane of glass left in the building. All along the shore are evidences of the terrific force of the explosion, the damage being enormous.

About a quarter of a mile from the scene of the explosion lay the United States collier Jason, recently completed and ready for her trial trip. Immediately after the explosion she resembled a battered practice ship. Four men were killed outright and twelve injured by the iron hail. The sides of the vessel were battered and in places were huge holes as clean as if made by a shot.

MADISON LOST TO RUSHVILLE

Local High School Team Displayed
Real Class Winning by 21 to 18 Score.

GAME WAS WON IN LAST HALF

Overcame Lead of Two Points and Gradually Pulled Away—Was Hard Fought Battle.

Playing in the best form of the season the local high school team defeated the Madison high school team last night 21 to 18. The game was fast and rough throughout and Rushville won a well earned victory. The locals displayed the old fighting spirit and the team was in the game all the time. The contest ended the home season for Rushville and it was ended in a fitting way. If Rushville had played the kind of basketball all through the season that it did last night the number of games in the won column would have been greater.

The Madison team was the first to score and did so after five minutes of play. Several field goals from pretty angles gave Madison an increased lead and it looked as though the locals were again in for a defeat. Hinkle broke the ice for Rushville and annexed the first field goal. Cameron made two and Roam one in the first half and Rushville was well up in the running. The half ended 10 to 8 in favor of Madison.

During the first few minutes of play in the last period Rushville swept Madison off the floor and the whirlwind game of the locals seemed to bewilder the visitors. Webb started the fire works and put his team in the game by making three field goals in quick succession. Webb in this half of the game displayed the best basketball playing that he has shown this season and instead of fighting the ball he took a turn at fighting Madison and got away with it to the number of five field goals.

Rushville led during the entire last half but Madison was always close and it was no cinch to tie up the game. A field goal by Hinkle and a foul by Cameron ended the scoring. Madison came within two points of tying the score but the locals keep working all the time. The large crowd was kept on edge by the closeness of the game. The Rushville guards played an exceptionally good game and the fast Madison forwards had little show.

Rushville plays at Madison next Friday night. The lineup and summary:

Rushville	Position.	Madison
Hinkle	Forward.	Cochran
Cameron	Forward.	Jones
Webb	Center.	Morrow
Roam	Guard.	Patton
Shanahan	Guard.	Phillips

Field goals—Hinkle 2, Cameron 2, Webb 5, Roam, Cochran 3, Jones, Morrow 2. Foul goals—Cameron, Cochran, Morrow 2. Referee—Crosby of Madison.

creased yield of from one to three bushels per acre. The advantage comes in the removal of a large amount of dirt, chaff, and sticks, which if left in the seed clog the drill more or less and prevent the proper distribution of the seed. Another advantage from fanning which is not measured in bushels or money, is the escape from sowing a large number of weed seeds. The oats crop can be largely choked out by weeds and the quality considerably injured after harvest by weeds causing heating, moulding, and discoloration of the seed. Weeds contribute much to small returns from growing oats.

Another cause of low yields and one which can be cheaply prevented, is the infection of the seed oats with loose smut. The yield is frequently diminished as much as 20 per cent. Fifty cents worth of formaldehyde and one dollar in labor will treat enough oats with which to sow 20 acres. How can we treat the oats? Mix one pound of formaldehyde with 50 gallons of water. This is enough to treat 50 bushels of oats. Spread the oats out in a thin layer, moisten it with the formaldehyde solution by means of a sprinkling can and shovel over thoroughly, making sure to distribute the moisture to every kernel. Then pile up and cover with a canvas and leave for four hours. The oats is then ready to spread out to dry, after which the seed may be sown. It is well to thoroughly disinfect the sacks, bins, and drills to prevent reinfestation.

Frequently low yields are caused by too small an amount of seed per acre being sown. Station experiments show that the best yields are, on the average, obtained from sowing from two and one-half to three and one-half bushels of oats per acre. The average of four years work at the Indiana Station to determine the best rate to seed oats, shows the use of three bushels per acre to have produced three bushels more than that produced by any other seeding.

When the farmer has sought out the most prolific variety, prepared the seed in every way to guard against poor stand and disease, and has properly attended to the soil and seeding, he has done what he is naturally expected to do in raising oats, and then he may expect to get profitable returns.

SPRING MOVING STARTS.

The regular spring moving period has arrived, and there will be many people moving during the next two weeks. The first of March is always the signal for many changes on the farms of this community, as it usually at this time that farm leases expire, or possession is given by sellers.

Generally fair tonight and Sunday. Warmer tonight.
